

2022 Organ Pipe Cactus Joins Botanical Garden

It took a group effort to plant a large organ pipe cactus cutting in the Botanical Garden in the middle part of December.

Originally, it was supposed to go on the west side near the gate. However, when they dug a hole there, it soon filled with water.

After a few hours of research, it was determined that the main water supply line to Beardsley was leaking. Repairs would call for more than a shovel and a simple patch.

Thus, it was decided to “plant” this specimen closer to the greenhouse.
